made to the generality of commonition roofing materials.

That we have succeeded in producing a material that will, practically, form a fire, water, worther and time-proof Roofing, the experience of fifteen years has fully demonstrated, and we now authority our Roofing to the irspection of those interested, confidently believing that, on examination, their two judgment will convince them of the correctness of our claims.

The materials of which it is composed combine every requisite for a practically imperishable roof, which will withstand the sudden and frequent changes of any climate without audaining injury. We would call attention to the following facts: Firest—it is fire and water-proof.

Except—from its great clasticity it is not injuriously affected by extremes of host and cold.

Thind—It is adapted to all kinds of roofs, whether steep or flat and will not require frequent repairs, as is the case with metals and other codes.

Fouries It will not run in warm nor crack in cold scather, ocal-tar forming no part of the composition.

Expendit is very light, not requiring as strong or could a called control of the part of the conposition.

Firm—It is very light, not requiring as strong or expensive a structure to sustain it as many other kinds of receiving.

Sixin—For preserving shingle roofs, one light conting will lest longer than four coasts of point.

SEYNTH—For preserving and repairing the roofs
it is unequaled by any other material now in use.

A coaring the of dutils purchs onen a tin roof that is leaking and badly rated will make it tight as

It is asserted that there have been more losses of life and destruction of property by lightning in Canada and the United States, this year, than in any previous one. Mode of Pensioning Literary and Scientific People and Their Relatives in England. In the English Civil Pension List, for the year ending June 20, 1860, we find six un-married sisters of the late Dr. Dionysius Lardner, who, "in consideration of their late brother's labors in the cause of science, and their scanty means," are almoners on the public purse to the sum total of £125, "in equal proportions," making among the six ladies a trifle more than £20, or about $100 each per annum. Their "late brother's labors in the cause of science" will just keep them from starwing, but nothing more, Edward Atherstone, the nost who wrote the ward Atherstone, the poet, who wrote the Fall of Nineveh, and some other ambitious works, "in consideration of his great services works, "in consideration of his great services in literature, and of his advanced age," is rewarded with a yearly subsidy of £25. These respective sums seem altogether inadequate. If the parties named are worthy of such recognition by the Government, the pensions awarded them should have been large enough to keep them a little more removed from want than these alms—for such they really are—can possibly do. Considering the large sums given as retiring annui-ties to officers and others, who can boast aristocratic connections, or to their widows and children, "laborers in the cause of science and literature," would not seem to be of much consideration. Even the widow of Thomas Hood only reserved £100 a year. from the Royal Fund, while some gouty old

Admiral—we forget his name—on the same day was pensioned at £3,000. PRESENT CONDITION OF SPAIN.-Spain has PRESENT CONDITION OF SPAIN.—Spain has long been looked upon as a used-up country. Statistical returns, however, of the country, tell a different story. Spain is about twice the size of the State of Missouri, but on this area it has nearly fifteen times the population of that State—nearly fifteen and a half millions. There are four cities in the kingdom, whose population exceeds 100,000, Madrid being the largest, and numbering 281,170. There are five cities baving a population ranging from 40,000 to 70,000. Ulation ranging from 40,000 to 70,000.

Spain's imports grew from 33,000,000 in 1850 to 77,000,000 in 1859. There are in Spain 431 English miles of navigable canals, 524 miles of railroads finished, 510 miles in progress, and 1,580 miles more authorized. There are also 3,933 miles of telegraph lines in operation. The public revenue of Spain for 1859 was estimated at $122,000,000, the for 1859 was estimated at $122,000,000, the total expenditures $123,000,000. About 1,000,000 of her children are in schools. The number of religious functionaries has been reduced. A hundred years ago they were estimated at near 210,000, or one to forty-three of the population. Now they count about 56,000, or one to 275.

He was exwhite Head, Nantanket Beach. He was ex-amining a gun, which was heavily charged, and had a very stiff lock. While handling the gun, it was accidentally discharged, and recolling with great force, the breech struck him in the side, inflicting a severe wound. Medical aid proved unavailing, and he died of his injuries Monday night.

Man Kulled with a Chieff.—An accident lately occurred at Hortonville, Wisconsin, by which a millright named Benjamin Rideout was almost instantly killed. He was endeavoring to replace a belie on some of the machinery of a steam mill, when a chief that he held in his hand got entangled and was thrown against his stomach and he fell against the balance-wheel by which he was terribly mangled.

Lord Byron's Family and Female Gam-The following gossip is drawn out by the recent death of Lady Byron, in England:

recent death of Lady Byron, in England:

The death of Lady Byron has awakened a few old recollections and old controversies, and the family feud is again fought over. Strange to say, in an interesting sale which took place not long since at Puttick & Simpson's, the well-known auctioneers of literary property, of autographs, and MSS, including letters of Napoleon, Nelson, Moore, Rogers and Fox, were several addressed to Monk Lewis by Lord Byron, in one of which he wrote: "It has been intimated to me that the persons understood to be the legal advisers of Lady Byron have declared their lips to be scaled on the causes of the separation between Lady Byron and me. If their lips are scaled up they are not scaled by me, and the greatest favor they can confer on me is to open them."

is to open them."

He goes on to say that he signed the deed of separation with the greatest reluctance after repeatedly and in vain calling for a statement of the charges against him, and that he would be glad to cancel and submit that he would be glad to cancel and submit the whole case to any tribunal, a proposition which had been declined previous to the separation. Her ladyship's legal adviser was Dr. Lushington, it may be remembered, who, as well as Hobbouse, the poet's dear friend, now Lord Broughton, are both alive. Those who are old enough to remember the scan-dals of that scandalous time (which were who are old enough to remember the scan-dals of that scandalous time (which were reviewed by Campbell on Lord Byron's part on the publication of Moore's Memours), will remember that Dr. Lushington said there were reasons which made it impossible for Byron and his wife ever to cohabit, and that for a time the foulest fancies ran riot in imaging them, nothing being too monstrous to attribute to the head of the Satanic school, as Southey calls him in his review of Cain as Southey calls him in his review of Cain, "himself the great original he drew." Now that both Lady Byron and Ada are dead and all the parties of the scene, it may be well that the secret should be published. It may wipe away a stain from the poet's name. At the worst, nothing can be worse than the world's prurient imaginings.

Lady Byron latterly never mixed in society, and even some twelve years since looked completely broken. She possessed a highly cultivated mind, which she trained under the severest discipline of mathematics, of which science she was passionately fond. Her daughter "Ada, sole daughter of my Her daughter "Ada, sole daughter of my house and heart," inherited this passion, but, unfortunately for berself, carried it into a dangerous field. For some years, wholly unknown to her husband, she had, through an agent, a Mr. Kreelake, bet large sums on the turf, and was, down to "Teddington's last year, a large winner. Lured on by her success, and doubtless hoping to make a large coup, she ventured out of her depth, and laid immense sums against the horse "Teddington." At the settling, Mr. Kreelake being made unable to pay his debts, the story had to be told. Lord Lovelace, with unbending honor, paid the whole amount, some where near £60,000, but Lady Lovelace never recovered from the pain and suffering this exposure brought, and died in Italy soon after.

This passion of gambling was not confined to Ada alone, or the British aristocracy. Perhaps the strangest feature of railway excite-to Ada alone, or the British aristocracy. Perhaps the strangest feature of railway excitement in England was the engerness with which the ladies leaped into it. These bright gamblers gathered each morning round the share list, with the same eager passion with which they might be seen to-day round the faro-table at Baden, or round some Parisian cambling-booth some century since. They

The most brilliant of the hand is the present Dowager Marchioness of Allesbury, one of the most dazzling and dashing women in England, of the Lady Gay Spanker school. A first-rate whip and charming horse-woman, her presence in the Park, with her profusion of fair curls, as with the grace of an Amazon she directs, preceded by her outriders, her fiery steeds down the row, always wakes great wonder and admiration umong the gaping loungers of the rails. Of her operations during the railway management she tions during the railway management she never made any concealment. Indeed, her light, airy carriage, might be often seen hanging in Cheapside, between two burly omnibuses, or gliding fairy-like among a huge bundle of baggage-carts during the "heated term," as Mr. Meriam would term it, which usually precedes the storm. Her late lord, who was of the "Dolly Spanker" school, used to look on his lady's exploits with a stupid joy. At one time she was said to realize £100,000, under the advice of Mr. Hudson, of whom her rank and fashlon made her a special pet, and out of whose keeping she used, with most playful coquetry, to coax the most important secrets. of railway state. Mistaken Identity - An Innocent Typo Charged with Murder.

The Rochester (N. Y.) Democrat, of Monday, contains the following:

We have received a letter from George Lawrence, formerly a compositor in the Democrat office, and who is well known in this city, where some of his relations still live. He has had a great many adventures in his day, by flood and field, and now gives an account of another, which is rather extraordinary in its character, He writes from Alton, Illinois, under date of August 20. We copy a part of what he says:

There has been a paragraph going the rounds of the papers, offering a reward of $1,500 for the arrest of one George Lawrence for the murder of a Miss Harvey, whom Lawrence seduced from Rockton, Illinois, last June, and who was found brutally murdered, near the road leading from Ottumwa to day, contains the following:

June, and who was found brutally murdered, near the road leading from Ottamwa to Agency City, Iowa, the following month. Now, as I bear the name of George Lawrence, and singularly enough, answer the description of the other person, the case bids fair to equal that of McHeury, who was tried in Canada as Wm. Townsend, for the murder of Nellis. My family and friends live in Rochester, and may, perhaps, think that I am the same person, thereby causing themselves much grief; therefore, I beg to disabuse them through your paper. You are well aware that for years I worked as a "jour" on the Democrat and Advertiser. In 1856 I left for the Weat, and since then have been "lying around losse," no where in particular and every-where in general, until in June last I was arrested for the murder of Laura Harvey was arrested for the murder of Laura Harvey and confined here for identification, but as I was in St. Louis (twenty-five miles below here) at the time of the murder, my innocence was easily established, and since then the body of the George Lawrence has been found, murdered, where his supposed victim was found.

"I wish it distinctly understood that I am not dead, nor any where near it, nor do I think I shall "shuffle off this mortal coil" for some time to come, and that my friends may not mourn me as dead, and go to the expense of sables and a long obituary on the virtues (?) of the deceased, I ask you to enlighten them on the subject."

EXTRAORDINARY DEFENSE OF A CRIMINAL There is a man named Lottey, on trial in Richmond, Va., for the murder of his sister-Richmond, Va., for the murder of his sisterin-law, because she refused to clope with the counsel for the prisoner may be inferred from the testimony, and leads to the belief that an effort will be made to sustain, by argument, the proposition that she did not die from the wound, but is consequence

Outrages and Crucities to Scamen-A French Lad's Story.

The attention of the United States Dis-trict Attorney at New York has recently been called to atrocities said to have been committed on board one of our largest packet-ships trading between this port and Liverpool. A French boy, Joseph Delatre, makes an affidavit, which is on fle, in which are described scenes that puts the Pirate's Own Book to shame. The New York World says:

"He states that he arrived in New Orleans on the 25th of March last, and after par-taking of a cup of coffee and a piece of toast. taking of a cup of coffee and a piece of toast, he was invited to go on board this ship. Here he was left by the boarding-master. Subsequently his chest was sent on board, accompanied by a bottle of brandy and one pound of tobacco. The second mate broke open his chest, and took from it all be had except an old flannel shirt, a pair of overalls, and a immer. The ship was towed. alls, and a jumper. The ship was towed down to the Belize, where she remained more than two weeks, during which time he witnessed scenes calculated to make even a witnessed scenes calculated to make even a sailor shudder. The language of the officers was exceedingly profune; flogging, beating, and blows of all kinds, were every-day occurrences, and the food would have disgusted a hungry dog."

'The ship's company was composed of twenty-five men, representing many nationalities. twenty-five men, representing man, nationalities. Among the number were three fine-looking Portuguese. One day, while on the coast, they being no longer able to stand the ill-treatment and beatings to which they were subjected, all three jumped overboard, and tried to gain the shore by swimming; but after struggling some time, two of them sunk to rise no more, while the third was picked up by the towboat and put on board of the ship. Another man was badly beaten and finally kicked from aloft, and falling overboard, thus ended his sufferings. The same outrage was enacted upon the person of a Dutch boy. The captain was standing on deck and leaning over the bulwarks when the boy was thrown into the sea, and he gave orders not to save him. It is further stated orders not to save him. It is further stated that he watched him through his spyglass in his dying struggles, the sea at this time being very smooth. Delatre adds that one night during the voyage he was standing behind one of the boats, when the second and third mates began to coax and caress a Mexican boy, who was not much of a sailor, and, as if they were joking, pushed him against the bulwarks; then one of them against the bulwarks; then one of them took him by the neck with one hand and gugged his mouth, and placing his head over the bulwarks, while the other took out his knife and cut the boy's head off, and threw the headless body into the sea. This was enacted as a joke, and with the grin of a hangman on their faces.

"On seeing the Frenchboy watching them, they told him if he dared to mention the circumstance to any one, they would serve him cumstance to any one, they would serve him in the same way. Nor is this all. A car-penter, who had been 'shanghaled' in Now Orleans, was so bally beaten that he died in two days after the vessel arrived in Liverpool. At the coroner's inquest the jury gave their verdict to the effect that the carpente came to his death by the hands of the second came to his death by the hands of the second and third mates. They fied, and one of them was walking the streets of this city a few days ago, with the French boy's clothes on, and meeting him, shook hands with him. The boy started for an officer, and when he returned the man had, of course, gone. These two mates figured conspicuously in acts of a similar character on board of another of our packet ships not long since. It was said in court, a few days since, that the captain of the first vessel refurred to was a very humane man, and just as the vessel a very humane man, and just as the vesse was entering port he gave every seaman Bible. This is not the first time the vesse has been seized for acts of a like nature. In this case, out of twenty-five men who left New Orleans in her, only eighteen arrived in Liverpool.

"Incredible as the above stories appear, they form part of an affidavit now on file in the United States Court of the Southern District of New York, and the matter is now undergoing a judicial investigation." Accidental Discovery of Australian Gold. All American readers are familiar with the accidental discovery of gold in California, in the widening of Sutter's mill-race. The account of a similar discovery in Australia is interesting: In January, 1849, a shepherd went to Mr. In January, 1849, a shepherd went to Mr. Charles Brentani's shop in Melbourne, and offered for sale a piece of quartz, thickly interspersed with gold. A great many questions were naturally asked, and, in reply, he described himself as a shepherd, upon a station in the Pyrences, in which locality he had picked up the gold; he added that he knew where there was plenty more to be procured. Mr. Brentani obtained the assistance of two working jewelers, Duchene and Forrester, and had a proper assay made. The mass was found to be pure gold, and the and Forrester, and make proper assay made.

The mass was found to be pure gold, and the shepherd, who gave his name as Chapman, was sent for and fed and clothed by Mr.

Pyrenees, Excited by dreams of treasure, he planned Excited by dreams of treasure, he planned an expedition that, in company with the lucky shepherd, should proceed to the spot. The party left Melbourne with the utmost secreey, taking with them a dray, which they proposed to fill with gold. M. Duchene returned to Melbourne some time after, it appeared that his more knowing companions had, according to his statement, given him the sip, not desiring that he should share in their good fortune; but this account did not appear satisfactory to Mrs. Brentani, who their good fortune; but this account did not appear satisfactory to Mrs. Brentani, who seemed to have a pretty good guess of the errand her husband had gone upon; and in her alarm for his safety, she charged Duchene with having taken away his life; and, to save himself, he made a full disclosure of all the particulars. So far from allaying the terror of Mrs. Brentani, these facts only increased it, and Duchene, who was a Frenchman, would most likely have been incarcerated upon the charge of murder, had not ated upon the charge of murder, had not Brentani and the party opportunely returned.

The public curiosity was naturally excited by the strange disclosures which had been made, but all inquiries for a while were avoided. The party, however, had picked up two large nuggets weighing upward of twenty ounces each. But the most extraordinary part of the affair was, that Chapman disappeared. How, or under what circumdinary part of the amar was, that Unappear disappeared. How, or under what circum-stances, it is impossible to say, as the whole story is involved in mystery. That the gold was found in the place indicated by him appears certain, and it is to this strange individual, therefore, that we are indebted for it—but he never again reappeared on the public stage. A SCENE NOT IN THE BILL.—The Octoroon was played in San Francisco not long since, and as usual had a successful run. One evening, however, the performance was varied in the most unexpected manner, by a member of the State Senate of California.

a member of the State Senate of Camornia.

Senator Egerton being on a bit of a "tare," dropped in at the theater and became highly interested in the play—The Octoreon. In the scene where the auctioneer sells "Zoe," and knocks her down to "McClosky" at $25,000, and the bystanders are indignant, he says: "I can't belp it, he (McClosky') has the law on his side and must have her;" Egerton, who sat in the frunt scat of the dress-circle, rose up and sung out, "D—n the law, $25,000 for her." The "Zoe" in this case being exceedingly pretty, the sympathies of the audience were with the last bidder, and they shouted, "The hid is regular, let him have her." It took ten minutes to quiet the house.
